Later on, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau was to meet up in working session with the other G7 leaders, and praise the very recent free trade agreement between Canada, the U.S. and Mexico. In their meeting Sunday, Trudeau praised the new, even though, not yet ratified, free trade agreement between Canada, the U.S. and Mexico. The following meetings, as the leaders conducted their bilateral sessions, and wrapped up, their two day- G7, have been largely upstaged by U.S. trade tensions even triggered by the surprise visit by Iran's Foreign Affairs Minister, invited by President Macron to the G7.

PM TRUDEAU HAD HIS FIRST MEETING WITH HIS FRENCH COUNTERPART PMT MACRON-----

They have discussed a couple of issues, including Macron's efforts and make a mediation, with the Iranian nuclear situation, and ease tensions and tensions in that Middle East area. More particularly, PM Trudeau and Macron also discussed climate issues ahead of a larger summit session on climate, oceans and biodiversity that included G7 leaders and the heads of other countries invited to participate as guests, in that matter.

Climate action is among probably the topic where the two head of states French and Canadian, converge mentioning that President Donald Trump, was not present for the beginning of the climate session .

Actually, the provisions of the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and Europe are much desired to continue to apply in the United Kingdom until a new agreement is negotiated a little later, Brexit .
